Actually, other sources also demonstrate that the “new approach” of this book was extant long before this book was published. For instance, this except from the Buddhist Dictionary of Nyanatiloka Mahathera (first published in 1951, 4th revised edition published in 1980) regarding the definition of consciousness clearly demonstrates an understanding of the khandhas as “inseparably linked” and a “flux”:

2. The “new approach” of this book has many close parallels to the one the Venerable Nanananda exposed 29 years earlier in his seminal book “Concept and Reality” (1971) and expanded on in “The Magic of the Mind” (1974) and “Nibbana: The Mind Stilled” (2010); but due credit is not attributed to him.

As Buddhism spread, it encountered new currents of thought and religion. In some Mahayana communities, for example, the strict law of karma (the belief that virtuous actions create pleasure in the future and nonvirtuous actions create pain) was modified to accommodate new emphases on the efficacy of ritual actions and devotional practices.
