Paleocology is the study of interactions between organisms and/or interactions between organisms and their environments across geologic timescales. As a discipline, paleocology interacts with, depends on and informs a variety of fields including paleontology, ecology, climatology and biology. Paleocology emerged from the field of paleontology in the 1950s, though paleontologists have conducted paleoecological studies since the creation of paleontology in the 1700s and 1800s. Combining the inv

Community ecology and paleoecology are both concerned with the composition and structure of biotic assemblages but are largely disconnected. Community ecology focuses on existing species assemblages and recently has begun to integrate history (phylogeny and continental or intercontinental dispersal) to constrain community processes. This division has left a “missing middle”: Ecological and ...
