Soft serve is a different animal than hard scoop ice cream. It's got a much lower milk-fat, which keeps it from turning to butter when churned vigorously. Soft serve ice cream is about 3-6% butterfat; super-premium ice cream has anywhere from 14-16% butterfat. Butterfat is necessary for both taste and mouthfeel, but too much will dull the taste and make it feel too buttery. If there is too ...

Secondly and most importantly, they do not sell soft serve ice cream , only hard. It's an issue because the person I was with really only eat soft ice cream and waited all that time only to find out they don't even serve it. I realize it's a chocolate shop more than ice cream store but I've never been to a place that didn't have soft serve.
