The Creative Connection is a Process for Reclaiming Vital Parts of Ourselves Natalie Rogers makes an enormous contribution to the art of psychotherapy by approaching the essence of clients through every one of their senses. Using music, dance, art, words, pictures, and sculpture, she teaches therapists first to unlock the creative process in themselves and then, like skillful midwives, to bring to birth the creativity of others.

The program is also ideal for people who are at a crossroads, those wanting to connect with their own authenticity and work through issues using expressive arts methods in a safe and, non-judgmental setting. The training is open to both Meridian and non-Meridian students. No art training is required, just an open mind and the desire to explore the magic of the expressive arts. Enrollment is now open for our 2021/2022 program which begins in September 2021.

Our approach is based mainly on Natalie Rogers' person centred expressive arts model, which she named the Creative Connection. I am intrigued by what I call the creative connection, the enhancing interplay among movement, art, writing, and sound (Natalie Rogers). The emphasis is on the expressive process rather than the aesthetic outcome and rests on the deep belief that we are all artists at heart, that to release our creativity is a stimulant to greater wellbeing and vitality.

EXPRESSIVE ARTS THERAPY. At its very core, expressive arts therapy is a non-prescriptive, non-diagnostic approach to psychotherapy that works to empower individuals and promote their personal development, health, and well-being. The focus is not on fixing an individual, but rather providing them with the tools to explore who and how they are, and express their imagination.
