Only Cimabue's last work, the mosaic of St. John the Evangelist, in the Duomo of Pisa, is dated (1301–02). The large Crucifix, in S. Domenico, Arezzo, is generally accepted as his earliest work and datable before 1272. The frescoes in the upper church of S. Francesco, Assisi—some of which were damaged in the earthquake of 1997 and later restored—were probably executed between 1288 and 1290.

With this cross, Giotto modified the 13th-century model of the Dying Christ on the Cross, exemplified in the artworks of Cimabue and Giunta Pisano. In the works of his predecessors, the bi-dimensional figure of Christ is much more slumped on the cross and the two nails at Christ's feet are different.
